

The free market will weed out un-profitable business fax activity. It is not the job of the government to restrict free trade practices. Let the free market decide if this advertising practice works or not. If it is not profitable, the business model will fail. If it is profitable, then the faxed advertisements are serving a segment of the market as evidenced by its profitability. If you deny this market segment access to unsolicited advertising, you also deny the opportunities that are advertised, therefore, impeding business transactions in a free market! Is that the goal of Government today? What about the rights of Americans to learn about new products and services? How am I supposed to sign up with a company I have never heard of to give them permission to notify me of products and services that I am currently unaware of? Do these questions seem kind of crazy, as I am reading them to myself, I think they do.

Please re-consider this new mandate requiring signed permission before someone receives a fax from a business.

Thank you.
